Introduction and special features

TESOL is the Teaching of English to Speakers of Other Languages. It is an umbrella term which encompasses the teaching of English as a 'second', 'foreign' or 'additional' language and as a lingua franca; teaching both multilingual and monolingual groups of students; and teaching both young learners and adults. TESOL professionals work as instructors, materials designers, and test developers.

The MA TESOL with Korean is designed for both qualified/experienced and intending TESOL professionals (who may be joining the programme directly from undergraduate-level studies or who may have other, non-ESOL, teaching experience) who plan to teach English in Korea after graduation.

You can enter this programme as a beginner in Korean. You can also enter if you have studied Korean before, as long as you do not already have C1 level or above of the Common European Framework for Languages (CEFR).

Our MA programmes attract students from the UK and many parts of the world, who bring with them a diverse mix of educational backgrounds and experiences. This creates opportunities for you to work with people of different nationalities and educational cultures with a view to increasing your cross-cultural understanding and opening your mind to new possibilities within your specialisation.

The TESOL side of the programme consists of two 30-credit modules, two 15-credit modules, and a 60 credit Dissertation. For 30-credit modules you will take Second Language Acquisition, where you will discover key theoretical issues in second language learning and relate theoretical frameworks to your own teaching context, and Theory and Practice in Language Teaching, where you will gain practical experience of lesson planning and delivery and explore how to adapt materials and methods to diverse contexts.

For 15-credit modules, you will take Current Developments in Language and Applied Linguistics where you will develop a critical understanding of contemporary developments in the fields of language and applied linguistics with a particular focus on the nature and status of English and other languages in a rapidly changing world. On the second 15-credit module, Research Methods, you will discover a variety of approaches to research used in TESOL and the broader field of Applied Linguistics and explore links between research and your professional practice.

In addition, you will take two 15-credit Korean language modules. We have a range of modules at varying proficiency levels to suit your level of Korean. You will learn to communicate effectively, using both spoken and written Korean, enabling you to adapt quickly to teaching English in Korea after graduation.

You will complete your MA with a 60-credit module which gives you the freedom to conduct an independent research project related to TESOL.

Special features:

- Start Korean from beginner level – no need to have studied Korean, or any other language, before – or study at a level that suits you.
- Make use of your Korean skills after graduation when teaching English in South Korea – you will be at an advantage when settling in, and have special insight into your future students' language learning needs
- Gain TESOL experience through student-run community programmes such as YEAL (York: English as an Additional Language)
- Access specialist spaces for students: a Linguistics Lab, Languages Workshop, Lounge and Study
- Learn about current research issues and methods from guest lecturers in our Colloquium Series on a variety of topics related to programmes in Language and Linguistics
- Apply to join the University's Students-as-Researchers scheme
- Take part in extra-curricular activities related to Korean language and culture: the vibrant student run Korean Society, where you can experience Korean culture and meet home and exchange students.

Admissions criteria

You must meet the minimum entry requirements which are published on the programme specific webpage. In addition:

If your first language is not English, you need to take an IELTS test or an equivalent qualification accepted by the University (see <https://www.yorksj.ac.uk/international/how-to-apply/english-language-requirements/>).

If you do not have traditional qualifications, you may be eligible for entry on the basis of Recognition of prior learning \(RPL\). We also consider applications for entry with advanced standing.

Programme aim(s)

To prepare students to work as a TESOL practitioner in Korea and/or continue to doctoral level study. Successful students will be able to adapt materials and methods to diverse contexts and challenge conventional thinking in TESOL policies and practices. The study of Korean will give students an advantage when adapting to life in Korea, and provide insight into their students' language learning needs.

Programme learning outcomes

Upon successful completion of the programme students will be able to:

- 7.1 Display in-depth, extended or specialist knowledge and understanding of concepts, information and techniques relevant to TESOL
- 7.2 Display an advanced understanding of the applications of theory to relevant real-world contexts
- 7.3 Critically evaluate current issues and research in the subject field of TESOL
- 7.4 Take a critical and reflective role in developing and communicating ideas
- 7.5 Communicate effectively, using both spoken and written Korean, enabling them to adapt quickly to teaching English in Korea after graduation.

Learning, teaching and assessment

In your TESOL modules you are encouraged to play an active role, critically reflecting on subject input and contextualising it through structured and assessed reflection on how your reading and discussion connects with your own experience. Module tutors will take the role of facilitators, encouraging you to think outside your own sphere of reference and maximising the development of your subject knowledge and understanding. You will be encouraged to share your experience and reflections through in-class dialogue and a proactive approach to learning will be promoted.

On the Theory and Practice in Language Teaching module you will have opportunities to gain experience of lesson planning, developing your confidence to deliver and evaluate your lessons through micro teaching.

In your Korean modules, we use a communicative teaching style, teaching speaking and listening through tasks such as pair-work and group work. Reading and writing input includes focus on independent learning strategies. Modules for students with prior experience of Korean will be delivered using content-and language integrated learning, studying aspects of Korean cultures, communities and societies through the medium of Korean. You are expected to proactively engage with the language inside and outside of class time. Korean modules are assessed with a combination of oral tests, videos, and/or written work. You are encouraged to make use of opportunities available to you to research Korean language, culture and society for the assessments on your TESOL modules and the dissertation, in order to deepen your understanding of these areas.

Your final piece of work will be a dissertation exploring a specific research question(s) about a topic within TESOL which is of interest to you. This Dissertation provides an opportunity for you to show that your knowledge of Applied Linguistics, as it applies to your chosen research topic and question, is both relevant and up-to-date. You will be supervised by an academic member of staff but will be guided towards taking independent responsibility for your own work. The Dissertation module is designed to enable you to provide evidence of your ability to pro-actively formulate research plans, independently carry these out and critically reflect on your findings.

You will be helped to acquire the key skills appropriate to taught postgraduate study. These include: evaluation of your own achievement and that of others; the ability to develop professional relationships; self-direction and effective decision-making and time management; independent learning; and the ability to work in a way that encourages continuing professional development.

The programme employs a range of teaching, learning and assessment practices including:

- Lectures (with supporting materials posted on the VLE)
- Tutor and student-led seminars; workshops and discussion groups
- Independent study and research
- Collection and analysis of data
- A range of assessment methods, catering for a diverse range of preferences in assessment type, including essays, self-reflection, data analysis, peer teaching, and critical reviews, and, for the language modules, oral, reading/writing/grammar tests, and video
- Online submission of assessment
- Formative assessment and feedback
