Introduction

Religion has historically shaped and influenced the lives of individuals and societies politically and culturally. Today religion is more relevant than ever, so we believe that an understanding of religion is central to understanding what is happening in the world. Accordingly, the distinctive features of this programme arise from the clear relationship between the study of religion, theology, and issues in contemporary society. Modules cover the connections between religion and controversial issues in modern life, such as the gap between wealth and poverty; the relationships between races and genders; sexuality; equal opportunities; the influence of the media; the role of ethics in life and death decisions; religion and politics; religious communities living as minorities, theological responses to environmental issues, religion and sustainability, whether war is a viable and moral option; religion and genocide. You will also learn about foundational philosophical and theological thinkers and historical events that underpin global societies. Additionally, you will be able to explore how aspects of religion and theology manifest in contemporary culture through visual culture, film and literature as well as expressing your own ideas through artwork, posters, and creative writing.

In order to study Religion and Theology at York St John University you might be a person of faith or none; believers, agnostics and atheists all have important contributions to make to current debates. This award will give you a clear understanding of the complex relationship between religion and theology, both historically, and in contemporary contexts. It will also encourage you to explore more advanced issues in these areas by conducting your own research, so as to develop your own informed responses to some of the questions that might be raised, for example: why is religion both a positive and negative force? Is religion compatible with science – and if so, how? What do feminist thinkers have to say about religious belief? At York St John we see religion and theology not just as an intriguing intellectual pursuit, but also as a way of engaging with the world around us, and the problems it presents us with – and we encourage you to take your own thinking seriously.

This programme will equip you to think in an attentive, critical and rigorous manner, to investigate a diverse range of beliefs with curiosity and respect, and to articulate your own views clearly, confidently and effectively. As well as having their own intrinsic worth, these abilities will also prepare you well for working in a range of occupations. Students completing the programme will take with them generic transferable skills such as: research competence; analytical clarity; effective written and oral communication; self-management; teamwork; effective use of IT.

Special features

The Religion and Theology degree has a range of special features:

- Annual away days in each year of the programme help to develop academic skills and foster a sense of community (at the university's expense, non-staff budget permitting).
- Many modules include trips to relevant sites, like convents, mosques, galleries or local archives (at the university's expense, non-staff budget permitting).
- Optional research modules in the final year allow students to focus on their own areas of interest.
- The programme includes focus on career and the development of work-related skills. A compulsory second-year module includes a work-placement and support from the careers service.
- Members of the staff team are closely connected to the prestigious Ebor Lectures, hosted by York Minister, where prominent public intellectuals give lectures on topics like science and religion, global justice, immigration or austerity.
- You will be taught by members of the staff team who are active researchers in exciting, contemporary issues, and who have published articles and books in a range of topics, including: religion and gender; peace-building and reconciliation; public theology and global justice; the problem of evil; psychology and religion.
- The opportunity to study abroad during the second year for a semester or a year.

Admissions criteria

You must meet the minimum entry requirements which are published on the programme specific webpage. In addition, if your first language is not English, you need to take an IELTS test or an equivalent qualification accepted by the University (see https://www.yorksj.ac.uk/international/how-to-apply/english-language-requirements/).

If you do not have traditional qualifications, you may be eligible for entry on the basis of Recognition of prior learning (RPL). We also consider applications for entry with advanced standing.

Programme aim(s)

The aims of the programme are to:

1. Encourage students to develop a sophisticated understanding of religious traditions across the world, as well as the complex role they play in philosophical, ethical and political discourses;

2. Inspire students to pursue their own philosophical and/or theological questions in a lively, informed and disciplined way, based on self-directed research and respectful learning from and about others' perspectives;

3. To cultivate a community of learning that encourages open, rational discussion, and which promotes qualities of respect, ethical sensitivity, social responsibility, and global awareness.

Programme learning outcomes

Level 4

Upon successful completion of level 4 students will be able to:

- 4.1 Demonstrate knowledge and understanding of key figures, sources or texts relevant to the study of religion and theology (e.g. Thomas Aquinas; the Talmud; Emile Durkheim)
- 4.2 Identify and explain central themes, concepts and debates relevant to religion and theology (e.g. the nature of religion; arguments for the existence of God; key theoretical approaches used in the study of religion) using primary and secondary sources.
- 4.3 Demonstrate knowledge and understanding of religious beliefs, institutions and practices, showing awareness of their wider social and cultural contexts.
- 4.4 Present arguments to support their own views, whilst representing the beliefs and arguments of others fairly and accurately, demonstrating sensitivity and respect.
- 4.5 Communicate with clarity and precision of expression, whilst adhering to academic conventions and demonstrating a basic proficiency in essential study skills relevant to the subject area.

Level 5

Upon successful completion of level 5 students will be able to:

- 5.1 Demonstrate knowledge and critical understanding of key figures, sources or texts relevant to religion and theology
- 5.2 Analyse central themes, concepts and debates relevant to a range of contexts within religion and theology (e.g. climate change, medical ethics, literature, politics) whilst making critical use of primary and secondary sources
- 5.3 Demonstrate knowledge and critical understanding of religious beliefs, institutions and practices, showing detailed awareness of their wider social and cultural contexts.
- 5.4 Compose coherent and effectively structured arguments, whilst representing the beliefs and arguments of others fairly and accurately, demonstrating sensitivity and respect.
- 5.5 Communicate with clarity and precision of expression, whilst adhering to academic conventions and demonstrating competence in a range of study skills relevant to the subject area.
- 5.6 Work collaboratively through fieldwork and placement experiences to demonstrate the development of skills in preparation for the workplace, (e.g. dialogue, encounter and observation) and generic skill building (e.g. teamwork, problem-solving and communication).

Level 6

Upon successful completion of level 6 students will be able to:

- 6.1 Demonstrate detailed knowledge and systematic understanding of selected figures, sources or texts relevant to religion and theology informed by recent scholarship at the forefront of relevant fields
- 6.2 Critically evaluate scholarly interventions in range of discussions relevant to religion and theology whilst making effective critical use of a wide range of primary and secondary sources
- 6.3 Critically apply detailed knowledge and systematic understanding of religious traditions to a range of discussions within the contemporary understanding of religion, showing sensitivity to their social, political and global contexts (e.g. feminist ethics, globalisation, film, genocides, public sphere).

- 6.4 Construct rationally persuasive, balanced arguments within religion and theology drawing critically on independently gathered primary and secondary sources, and in dialogue with other disciplines as appropriate (e.g. politics, social theory, peace studies).
- 6.5 Communicate complex material with clarity and precision of expression, whilst adhering to academic conventions and demonstrating effective use of a range of study skills relevant to the subject area.
- 6.6 Design and undertake a piece of extended independent research that demonstrates an in-depth knowledge, understanding and analysis of a specialised area within religion, philosophy and ethics.

Programme structure

Please note that not all options may be available every year as they depend on student demand and staff availability.

Any modules that must be passed for progression or award are indicated in the table above as noncompensatable. A non-compensatable module is one that must be passed at the relevant level (with a mark of 40) in order to progress.

*Students must choose either the short or the long dissertation (and cannot choose both).

 Students are not barred from taking modules where they have not taken the pre-requisite, so long as they are prepared to undertake background reading and they understand the risks involved. The following modules have pre-requisites:

- From Descartes to the Death of God pre-requisite is Philosophy and Religion
- Matters of Life and Death pre-requisite is Values and Virtues
- Problems of Evil pre-requisite is Philosophy and Religion
- Great Philosophical Texts pre-requisite is From Descartes to the Death of God
- Feminist Ethics and Religion pre-requisite is Matters of Life and Death
- Theology and Ethics through Film pre-requisites are Values and Virtues and Foundations of Theology

 Students may be exempt from the work-related learning module; for example, if they are taking the degree programme after retirement.

Learning, teaching and assessment

The Religion team aim to provide you with a stimulating and supportive environment in which you can achieve your potential during your degree. Academic support is provided in a range of ways. Module tutors will be available to consult with you regarding particular topics or pieces of assessed work. You will also be assigned a personal/academic tutor, who will meet with you throughout your degree to discuss your progress, to respond to any concerns you may have, and point you in the direction of more specialised support if necessary. Academic staff are all experts in their fields, and work hard to ensure that your lectures and seminars are clear, accessible, lively and thought-provoking. We also encourage our students to challenge, inspire and support each other as they learn. At some point in each year you will take part in an away-day/writing retreat with the whole year group, which aims to develop and strengthen the sense of community within the group, and gives opportunities for learning in a different environment.

Modules of study are based on a number of different forms of learning, including: formal class contact (lectures, seminars or workshops); group activity (e.g. discussions, preparing presentations or posters); independent study (reading, note-taking, research, preparing assignments). You will be given opportunities to actively participate in the teaching sessions and to develop your confidence through learning activities such as group discussion and presentations. This will enable you to develop both independence and collaborative skills as you learn both with and from your peers. Your tutor will guide you in preparing for these activities. In addition, there are also additional trips attached to some modules (for example, to local sites of religious significance), and a work placement that forms part of our 'work-related learning' module. Throughout your degree you will be given 'formative' opportunities to practice the skills needed in your assessment (for example, constructing an argument, or researching a new topic). This means that you will be continually reflecting on your progress, and working with tutors as you improve your academic skills.

Your degree will be based on a variety of forms of assessment, ranging from traditional essays to posters, commentaries, presentations and portfolios. This will ensure that you develop a range of skills that will be valuable to you as you prepare to leave university: research competence; argumentative skill; communicative clarity; cultural sensitivity, etc. At the same time, we ensure that you are given chances to develop and hone your abilities through repeated efforts at the same kind of task. In your final year you will refine these skills as you write your dissertation, which offers you the chance to independently research a topic of your own choice, whilst supervised by an expert in your area of study.

Progression and graduation requirements

The University's general regulations for undergraduate awards apply to this programme.

Any modules that must be passed for progression or award are indicated in the Programme Structure section as non-compensatable.
